

Minor IN BUSINESS LAW

Learn about the laws behind every business decision.

Coming into college, there are two fields that stand out to you - business and law. Knowing this, you're looking for a program that could help you gain perspective on both.

Program Overview

- Minor

Whether you're managing a personal business or working with corporate counsel, laws are everywhere, especially in business. In Stetson University's business law program, you will learn skills such as critical thinking, public speaking and analytical writing that will help you succeed in law school.

Students learn how to study a complex set of facts, analyze the issues and argue both sides of an issue. Our courses address subjects like contracts, sales, promissory notes, real estate, corporations, bailment, bankruptcy, white-collar crime, environment and ethics.

Career Significance

Stetson University's School of Business Administration is fully accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business International, a prestigious accreditation.

While the business law minor is not designed to make you a lawyer, it will help you recognize legal issues and responsibilities and make you more comfortable in a legal environment.
