Executive Business Administration (Executive M.B.A.)

The Stetson University executive master of business administration (executive M.B.A.) program offers experienced professionals from any academic background a way to earn an M.B.A. degree in only 19 months while still working. An award-winning faculty consisting of academic and business leaders teaches the program. Its curriculum is tailored to today's interconnected world. Classes are offered on alternating Fridays and Saturdays to fit with the busy schedules of participants.

A Distinctive Program

Stetson University's executive M.B.A. program is highly selective; cohorts are limited to 25 seats. The small class atmosphere that results from these small cohorts creates an atmosphere of collaborative learning, where debate and discussion can flourish and where personal and professional experience are used as a starting point for learning. The program is designed for experienced professionals who have benefited from years of work experience. Students will have the benefit of gaining from the experience of their peers and professors.

The program includes a global focus in that courses are taught with the idea in mind that the world of business is shrinking and that knowledge of global markets and business practices will become ever more essential in the future. International travel is a requirement of the program.

U.S. News & World Report ranks Stetson University among the top three best Southern masters-granting institutions. The Stetson University School of Business Administration, through which the executive M.B.A. is offered, is fully accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business International. Stetson University is itself accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.
