Why an M.Ed. in Educational Leadership from Stetson?

There are three reasons why Stetson is the place to get your graduate degree:

• Our leadership program focuses on “theory to practice,” for a unique principalship preparation, which is recognized in Florida and the United States.

• Our program focuses on contemporary content and experiences that results in passing the Florida Educational Leadership Examination (FELE Principal’s Exam)

• Our internship experience is focused on working professionals. The learning experiences provide candidates with practical opportunities to view firsthand the roles and responsibilities of being a principal in public and private school settings.

The Program Design

Pursuing this master’s degree will enhance your knowledge of leadership, curriculum development, legal and financial aspects of school management, and working effectively with linguistically, culturally, and racially diverse student populations.

Additionally, the Master’s Degree in Leadership will qualify you for positions as Deans, Assistant Principals, Principals, Program Directors, and other School Districts and State education level positions.

We prepare educational leaders who will be equipped to use their human resource skills, legal knowledge, and fiscal competencies to address significant educational challenges such as closing the opportunity gap and value added evaluation systems. Our program also prides itself on sending our graduates to pursue doctoral degree studies in leadership and other fields in education.

The Program Format

Our graduate program is a research-based, “theory to practice” and competency-based program with a 30 credit requirement, designed with a schedule that fits the work and personal needs of educational professional.

Candidates will proceed through the course work in cohorts, starting in the summer and January semesters. The program encourages candidates to build meaningful relationships with their principals, administrators, and their peers in each cohort. Candidates are encouraged to become leader-scholars, reflective decision makers who use research and validated models to enhance their knowledge, skills, and professional and ethical dispositions involved in dynamic leadership for effective schools.

The program culminates in:

a) completion of 135 hour principal internship experience and
b) successful passing of the FELE principalship examination required for certification as an administrator/principal.

Several graduates use this degree completion to pursue specialist and doctoral degree studies.
