AARP is a 35 million member nongovernmental organization representing and addressing the needs and interests of people age 50 and over. We lead positive social change and enhance the quality of life for people age 50 and over through social policy, group buying arrangements, communications, advocacy, and community service.

Through the AARP Global Aging Program, we facilitate understanding and dialogue around the global aging agenda by convening and participating in international social and economic policy debates worldwide. Working with governmental and nongovernmental organizations to exchange ideas and identify "best practices" in addressing aging concerns worldwide, the AARP Global Aging Program is currently focused on the issues of pensions, labor markets, age discrimination, health care, and long-term care.

2007, AARP and Stetson University College of Law.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, the Journal of International Aging, Law & Policy permit any individual or organization to photocopy any article, comment, note, or other piece in this publication, provided that: (1) copies are distributed at or below cost; (2) the author and journal are identified; (3) proper notice of copyright is affixed to each copy; and (4) all other applicable laws and regulations are followed. Stetson University College of Law and AARP are pleased to present Volume 2 of the Journal of International Aging, Law & Policy (“Journal”). The Journal is dedicated to providing an international forum to discuss emerging issues in the elder law area. The Journal promotes understanding of elder law issues by: providing a forum for scholars and practitioners in different countries to share information about law, law reform and significant case law developments; and inspiring lawyers and other advocates representing aging citizens to work within their countries’ existing legal frameworks, as well as advocate legal reforms, to improve the lives of their elderly clients. It is also the editors’ hope that the Journal can help these groups come together as a global community, not only sharing ideas and information but also building on their shared work, knowledge and energy to foster dialogue and cooperation of action. In particular, the editors hope that this Journal can help educate an emerging international community of elder law attorneys and advocates.

The purpose of this volume, comprised of articles written by professors and lecturers from Canada, Israel, United Kingdom and the United States, has been to further the Journal’s mission of providing education in the elder law area by providing a global perspective of the development of elder law. The volume contains four articles and a bibliography of international elder law research. All four articles describe the development of elder law in the context of demographic, social, political and legal frameworks within the authors’ respective countries. Concluding this volume is an exhaustive bibliography of international elder law resources in both online and print formats.
