Greetings,

Fall 2004 has been a semester to remember! The College of Law, like much of Florida, was threatened by four hurricanes in six months. We were fortunate and suffered only minor damage on the two campuses. Between the hurricanes, we celebrated the College of Law’s Golden Anniversary in Tampa Bay. To mark this important milestone, we created a Hall of Fame, secured a heritage marker from the state of Florida, held several historical lectures, and threw a gala banquet in September.

In addition to celebrating our past, we continue to chart our future. As I reported in my last column, the College of Law has embarked on a strategic planning process. Phase 1, which involved setting our strategic directives and initiatives, is complete, and we are starting the tactical and operational planning phases, which we expect to finish this spring.

Below are the strategic directives and initiatives identified in Phase 1.

The College should seek to substantially enhance its national reputation.

- The College should recruit, enroll and retain a higher caliber and more diverse student body.
- The College should take steps to ensure that strong teaching remains a priority.
- The College should increase the quality and quantity of faculty scholarship, and should increase the exposure of that scholarship.
- The College should increase faculty engagement in the regional, national and international academic and bar communities.
- The College should use its strengths in certain academic areas to enhance its national reputation.
- The College should take steps to better utilize its alumni to increase the College’s national reputation.
- The College should increase its commitment to the profession and the community, both locally and beyond, to increase its national reputation and fulfill its responsibility to make a difference in the world.

The College should be more focused on its long-term goals in all facets of its operations.

- The College should be more focused on its long-term goals when planning the growth and development of its programs, making decisions concerning the expenditure of resources, hiring faculty and making student admissions decisions.
- The College should recognize how facilities issues may affect long-term goals.
- The College should value its role as part of a university community and strengthen its relationships with the other schools and colleges that form Stetson University.

The College should seek to substantially improve its financial position.

- The College should increase its endowment.
- The College should control its expenses.
- The College should seek to increase alumni giving.

The College should strive to ensure that, as it grows and develops, the culture of respect between students and faculty continues to flourish.

I appreciated the e-mails and letters I received from many of you in response to my last request for input, and I also welcome your response to these goals. We will update you on the final plan in a future edition of the Lawyer. Personally, I am excited about our direction and know that with your support, we can become an even stronger institution of higher education.

I wish you all a wonderful holiday season, and hope to see many of you in person as we travel the state in the final phase of the Cornerstone Campaign.

Sincerely,

Darby Dickerson, Vice President and Dean
Stetson University College of Law established the Center for Excellence in Higher Education Law and Policy in September 2004, building on the renowned programs established by its founding co-directors, Professors Robert D. Bickel and Peter F. Lake.

The center’s first major event will be the 26th annual National Conference on Law and Higher Education, set for February 2005 in Clearwater. Several distinguished lecturers from the United States and the United Kingdom will also visit the campus this spring, continuing the efforts that began this summer at Stetson’s Comparative Higher Education Roundtable at New College, Oxford University. Other activities and programs will be announced at the center’s formal launch in February.

“The center will allow Stetson College of Law to build on its many years of research, writing and professional development in the field of Law and Higher Education,” Bickel said.

“With the establishment of the center, we will be able to offer graduate students a Juris Doctor program that includes classroom, research and practicum experiences focusing on Higher Education Law. Through the center, we will also be able to continue our nationally recognized work in interdisciplinary legal education by exposing students and working professionals to the intersection of law and policy, and the emerging field of comparative higher education law.”

Prominent figures in the national discourse on higher education law, Professors Bickel and Lake are the authors of The Rights and Responsibilities of the Modern University: Who Assumes the Risk of College Life? and have published multiple articles and papers about higher education law and policy.

Second Stetson law professor in two years receives Fulbright

Stetson Law Professor Stephen Everhart was selected as a Fulbright Lecturer to teach in China for the 2004-2005 academic year.

Professor Everhart is teaching civil and criminal law and procedure, evidence, trial advocacy and dispute resolution to Chinese judges, lawyers and law professors.

“Senator Fulbright was a great man and a hero to me growing up, and to go to China on a scholarship bearing his name to help the United States and China forge a dispute resolution system that will enhance the economic and political ties between our countries is a huge honor for me,” Professor Everhart said.

“But I have never achieved anything in my life except in conjunction with the help of others, and I couldn’t have gotten this honor without the help of my family, friends, colleagues, staff and students at Stetson, and of course my colleagues and students around the world. This honor is mine today, but it is theirs tomorrow and forever,” he said.

The Fulbright Program, America’s flagship international educational exchange activity, was established in 1946 to build mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries. Fulbright scholars are selected on a highly competitive basis for their academic or professional achievement and demonstrated extraordinary leadership potential. Professor Peter L. Fitzgerald recently completed his work as a Fulbright Distinguished Scholar at the University of Edinburgh in Scotland. The late Dean Gary Vause also worked in China under a Fulbright scholarship.
Professor Everhart has published articles dealing with civil and criminal trial advocacy and has won the Homer and Dolly Hand Award for Excellence in Faculty Scholarship at Stetson. Professor Everhart, who holds a bachelor of arts in Asian studies, is former chair of the Criminal Procedure Rules Committee and the Criminal Law Section of the Florida Bar. He has trained English barristers and Chinese judges, lawyers, law professors and students in this country. In 2003, he taught in Temple University James E. Beasley School of Law’s J.D. program and its China and graduate LL.M. advocacy programs.

Other recent high Stetson scorers have included Addie Asay, who was invited to the Florida Supreme Court following the July 2003 bar exam; and Kelly Keller, who addressed the Second District Court of Appeal in August 2003.

Stetson alumni recognized at bar induction events

In recent years, several Stetson graduates have been invited to address bar induction ceremonies as a result of their high scores on the Florida Bar exam. J. Scott Slater ’04 addressed inductees from the Second District Court of Appeal in October, and Connie Davies ’03 was selected to speak to the same group in May.

“We were excited to have [Connie] speak because she has been an intern at the Second DCA with Judge Darryl Casanueva,” said Chris W. Altenbernd, chief judge of the court. Judge Altenbernd said the Florida Supreme Court identifies the top scorers on the bar exam and notifies each district court of appeal, which selects the speaker.

Davies graduated second in her December class and also interned at the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida in Tampa.

Stetson honors Jackson with service award

The College of Law awarded the 2004 Wm. Reece Smith Jr. Public Service Award to Sarasota attorney Mary Alice Jackson ’91.

A member of the elder law practice of Boyer & Jackson P.A., Jackson is chair of the Hospice of Southwest Florida Board of Directors, former chair of the Elder Law Section of the Florida Bar, and a member and leader of many service and professional organizations.

“In today’s legal world, where business acumen is sometimes given more play than the tired phrase ‘professionalism,’ it’s particularly significant that awards are given that recognize public service,” Jackson said. “Stetson has been a wonderful leader in promoting public service among its student body within its curriculum and its extracurricular activities.”

Stetson established the Wm. Reece Smith Jr. Award in 1990 to recognize individuals who have demonstrated exemplary achievements in public service. Smith, the award’s namesake and its first recipient, is a past president of the American and International bar associations and the Florida Bar.

“I’m grateful for, and stand in no little awe of, the example he has given to attorneys both as a member of the bar and of our society, and hope to live up to the ideals which this award represents,” Jackson said.

The College of Law presented the award on May 14 at its spring Honors and Awards Ceremony, which also recognized outstanding students and faculty.
Community Law Program honors student volunteer

Stetson has long required all students to complete 10 hours of legal pro bono service and 10 hours of community service before graduation. Student Jerri Mitchell-Tharpe worked more than 70 hours with the Community Law Program. Inspired by the program’s work and the staff’s friendliness, Mitchell-Tharpe spent two-and-a-half hours each Tuesday and Thursday last spring in the program’s office.

For her efforts, the program established the Outstanding Stetson Law Student Volunteer award and presented it to Mitchell-Tharpe at its annual meeting in April. The non-profit organization provides free legal services to thousands of low-income residents in southern Pinellas County each year.

“Jerri has been a great asset to our program,” said Janet Herron, executive director of the Community Law Program. “We are so appreciative of Jerri’s outstanding contribution to our program.”

Mitchell-Tharpe, who graduates in December, worked with the program last fall to complete her degree requirements and then offered to come back in the spring to help in any manner possible. “I just wanted to help as much as I could,” she said.

Stetson expands summer program to include Freiburg, Germany, and The Hague

Starting this summer, students may now get a front-row seat to the international courts in Europe and The Hague through the new Stetson Summer Institute in International Law. Students may spend all four weeks in Freiburg, studying topics in both international public law and international private law, or they may choose to spend the first two weeks at The Hague, studying international tribunals and alternative dispute resolution, followed by two weeks at Freiburg studying public international law.

Students in both tracks will earn four credit hours and visit international and local courts.

Australian team wins international environmental competition at Stetson Law

A team from the University of Technology, Sydney, won Stetson’s Ninth Annual International Environmental Moot Court Competition Oct. 30. Teams from six countries participated in the two-day competition. Stetson students Jennifer Gonzalez and James McTyier received best oralist and third place oralist (respectively) in the preliminary rounds.

The three final round judges were Peter Bridgewater, secretary general of the Ramsar Convention on Wetlands; Judge Virginia M. Hernandez Covington, U.S. District Court; and William Thomas, an environmental lawyer and former chair of the ABA International Environmental Law Committee.

Dean Darby Dickerson and Vice Dean Royal C. Gardner created this competition in 1996 to increase awareness about international environmental challenges. Since its inception, the event has grown to include Indian and Australasian qualifying rounds.

Stetson holds bankruptcy CLE in Canada, makes plans for Germany

Stetson presented its 4th International Bankruptcy Symposium this summer in the French-metropolitan city of Montreal, Quebec, Canada. This year’s symposium featured 12 faculty from the United States and abroad who spoke about international insolvency and bankruptcy issues.

Among the speakers was the top bankruptcy official in Canada, Superintendent of Bankruptcy Marc Mayrand. Other Canadian speakers included Bruce Leonard, who helped found the Insolvency Institute of Canada and the International Insolvency Institute. American speakers included Hon. Paul M. Glenn, Hans C. Beyer, Roberta A. Colton and Paul S. Singerman.

Hon. Alexander L. Paskay, chief U.S. bankruptcy judge emeritus and Stetson adjunct professor, was the program chair. Many of the participants brought their spouses, family or guests for afternoon group excursions to local points of interest, which included the Botanical Gardens, a guided bus tour of Montreal and Old Towne, and an eco-trip to the BioDome. Several Canadians also attended the symposium, including an author and editor of a LexisNexis book on the subject of U.S./Canadian Insolvency. The symposium group of attendees, speakers, family and guests totaled 66.

Next year’s symposium in Freiburg, Germany, is set for June 12-15, and more details will be posted online at www.law.stetson.edu/cle. Past symposium destinations have included Italy and Hungary.
Stetson wins nation’s premier trial competition

Stetson went undefeated to win the 2004 Tournament of Champions in Los Angeles this October. Sponsored by the National Institute for Trial Advocacy, the competition invites 16 teams from the nation’s elite trial advocacy programs to compete against each other. Since the competition’s creation in 1989, Stetson has won five first-place titles, more than any other school.

The Stetson team consisted of Richard Barbara and Julia Metts, with witnesses Cindy Barbara and Michael Kest. Stetson’s Trial Advocacy Fellow Pam Bell ’82 coached the team. Barbara was named the Best Oral Advocate for the final round.

“Winning was obviously a big thrill, but even more of a thrill was how we did it,” said Bell. “Coach after coach came up to me and told me how glad they were that Stetson won because we are professional, polished and classy.”

In the final round, Stetson defeated the University of Akron, last year’s champion. In earlier rounds, Stetson prevailed over Temple University, State University of New York at Buffalo, University of Florida, Pepperdine University, and University of Maryland. With the victory, the competition will come to Stetson’s campus in two years.

Summer victories continue Stetson’s winning advocacy tradition

Stetson’s Advocacy Board teams enjoyed very successful competition seasons. The trial team posted several national, regional and state victories and advocate awards, and the moot court board consistently placed in the top three in competitions and earned multiple brief writing and advocate awards. The client skills board also won on the national level.

“We’ve seen the success from our trial team mushroom out to successes of both our client skills board and our moot court board,” Professor Roberta Flowers said. She attributed this to all three areas now being part of one combined advocacy board, which allows teams to share resources and students to develop skills with more than one team.

A Stetson team won the E. Earle Zehmer Moot Court Competition in Orlando, sponsored by The Florida Bar Workers’ Compensation Section. The team of Stetson students Satyen Gandhi and Theresa Jean-Pierre defeated Florida Coastal School of Law in the finals, arguing before judges from Florida’s First District Court of Appeal. Stetson alumnae Wendy Harkness ’02, Paulette Zarbatany Brown JD ’02, MBA ’02 and Nancy Slack ’98 coached the teams. A second Stetson team, Harley Chivers and Dana Harris, reached the semifinals and received an award for the runner-up best brief.

For the fourth consecutive year, a Stetson team advanced to the finals in The Florida Bar’s Robert Orseck Moot Court Competition, held this summer in Boca Raton. The team, Jennifer A. Gonzalez and Jeff Goodloe, placed second after arguing before five Florida Supreme Court justices in the final round.

“Annually, this is a very big event for students. The students’ consistent success is broad-ranged and particularly meaningful since this competition is run by The Florida Bar for Florida law schools,” said Moot Court Advisor Stephanie Vaughan ’91. She also praised Gonzalez’s effort as the first member of Stetson’s part-time program to be involved with Stetson’s Advocacy Board.

“It was a true accomplishment,” Vaughan said.

Nine law schools from around the state sent two teams each to the tournament. Stetson’s second team advanced to the semifinals, making the school the only one to be represented twice in the late round.

Second ethics series video completed

In the spring, Stetson completed “Ethics and the Elder Lawyer,” a video dealing with ethical issues faced by elder law attorneys, such as diminished capacity. This is the second in a series of three ethics videos produced at Stetson.

“What a video in the area of ethics offers is the ability to watch the dilemma unfold, which generates discussion among the audience about the simulation and what the attorney’s next step should be,” Flowers said.

“How does the lawyer gauge the mental capacity of an elderly client and then determine what that lawyer should do?” she said. “There’s no way to get that sense without watching a video to determine if that person is competent or capable of understanding the settlement you’re asking them to reach. You can’t do that with the written word.”

In addition to being shown in Stetson classes, the series already has been shown in five states, at the National Elder Lawyer Association annual meeting, and will be used at other upcoming conferences.
Hurricanes take minor toll on law campuses

This hurricane season, Charley, Frances, Ivan and Jeanne each threatened Stetson’s Gulfport and Tampa campuses. Though Frances and Jeanne caused minor physical damage to the Gulfport and Tampa campuses, the storms’ most significant impact was on the fall schedules, as the College of Law closed for a total of four class days.

In the aftermath of Charley, which veered south only two hours before it was expected to strike Pinellas County, the campus united to collect school supplies for hard-hit students from Nocatee Elementary School in Arcadia. The Black Law Students Association raised funds for the International Red Cross to help Hurricane Jeanne victims in Haiti, and several other student organizations also united to raise funds for hurricane relief. Student Julia Metts volunteered with Robinson High School in Tampa on a school supply drive for Charlotte and Lee county students.

Stetson University’s main campus did not fare as well, sustaining damage from hurricanes Charley, Frances and Jeanne. The campus closed for 11 days and on-campus residents were sent home due to power outages, flooding, downed power lines and damaged buildings.

Stetson appoints, promotes administrators

Stetson University College of Law hired and promoted several administrators this year.

Mercedes Pino ’02 joined Stetson in the spring as assistant director of career services. She previously served as an assistant state attorney for the 11th Judicial Circuit’s domestic violence unit.

Scarlett Guy ’02 has been promoted to assistant dean of student life. Guy had previously served at Stetson as acting director of student services and assistant director of student services.

Rick Brewer has been promoted to executive director of business operations. In this role, Brewer will oversee many departments, including accounting, bookstore, business office, facilities, housing, insurance and purchasing.

Davina Gould was promoted to associate director of communications from assistant director. She will continue with her current duties centered on publication management and media relations.

Also promoted this year were Laura Zuppo to associate director of admissions, Emily Attridge to director of financial aid and institutional research, Tyler Hickey to director of events and special projects, and Dan Payne to manager of multimedia services.
Kristen David Adams
Associate Professor of Law and LeRoy Highbaugh Sr. Chair
Professor Adams published an article “Can Promise Enforcement Save Affordable Housing in the United States?” in the San Diego Law Review. She lectures frequently in pre-law orientation programs. She attended the American Law Institute annual conference in summer 2004.

Michael P. Allen
Associate Professor of Law
Professor Allen’s article, “The Constitution at the Threshold of Life and Death: A Suggested Approach to Accommodate an Interest in Life and a Right to Die,” has been published in the American University Law Review. Professor Allen attended the annual meeting of the Southeastern Association of Law Schools in August 2004, where he made a presentation reviewing the U.S. Supreme Court’s 2003-2004 term and moderated a panel regarding “The Jurisprudence of Justice Sandra Day O’Connor.” He was also elected to a two-year term as a member of the board of trustees of the Southeastern Association of Law Schools. Professor Allen presented his work on “The American Legal System” and “Significant Supreme Court Cases” at the National Microsociety Conference for Educators in July 2004. He attended a conference on Brown v. Board at 50 and was awarded the “Best All-Around Professor” award from the Calvin A. Kuenzel Student Bar Association. He has been interviewed by WTPT 13, WTSP 10, Orlando Sentinel, Associated Press, Tampa Tribune, St. Petersburg Times and Bay News 9 en Espanol about constitutional issues surrounding Terri’s Law and same-sex marriage.

Robert D. Batey
Professor of Law
Professor Batey’s article, “Minority Report and the Law of Attempt,” was published in the Ohio State Journal of Criminal Law. He attended the annual conference on Legal and Policy Issues in the Americas. He presented at the “Conference on The Failure of the Word and the Rise of Law and Literature” at Cardozo School of Law. He also made a presentation on “Mandatory Minimums” to the Pinellas County chapter of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. His column, “Probation Crackdown an Overreaction,” was published by the Tampa Tribune, and another column, “Declining Crime Rates Don’t Justify Sentencing Laws,” was published in the Daytona Beach News-Journal, Lakeland Ledger, Leesburg Daily Commercial and Naples Daily News. He was interviewed by the Tampa Tribune, the Jan King Bressler show, Palm Beach Post, Naples Daily News, Sarasota Herald Tribune, Bradenton Herald, Lakeland Ledger, Daytona Beach News-Journal, WTPT 13, WMNF 88.5 and Medill News Service about a number of criminal cases and legal issues in the news.

Mark Bauer
Assistant Professor of Law
Professor Bauer published “Small Liberal Arts Colleges, Fraternities, and Antitrust: Rethinking Hamilton College” in the Catholic University Law Review. He attended the Loyola Antitrust Colloquium Institute for Consumer Antitrust Studies.

Robert D. Bickel
Professor of Law and Co-Director, Center for Excellence in Higher Education Law and Policy
In June, Professor Bickel organized a dialogue on the subject of Comparative Higher Education Law and Policy, which was co-hosted by David Palfreyman of New College, Oxford, and the Oxford Center for Higher Education Policy Studies. The delegation included Dean Darby Dickerson, Professor Peter Lake, U.S. professors from Rutgers, Catholic, Notre Dame and Arizona State universities, and scholars from the United Kingdom. The three days of dialogue were keynoted by Lord Justice Rix of the Court of Appeals.

J. Catherine Bohl
Instructor of Legal Research and Writing
Professor Bohl is on the faculty of the National Judicial College and taught a three-day course on opinion writing to Native American Tribal Court judges in November.

Paul Boudreaux
Assistant Professor of Law
Professor Boudreaux spoke to the Sarasota Herald Tribune about the destruction of property from hurricanes in Florida.

Brooke J. Bowman ’02
Instructor of Legal Research and Writing
Professor Bowman serves as an assistant editor for Legal Writing: Journal of the Legal Writing Institute. She received the Best All-Around Part-Time Professor award from the Calvin A. Kuenzel Student Bar Association for 2003-2004.

Nicholas B. Cox
Elder Consumer Protection Fellow
Professor Cox was interviewed several times by the St. Petersburg Times and WTSP 10 on issues of consumer protection and criminal law. He and Professor Rebecca Morgan co-authored a column for the National Center on Elder Abuse about senior fraud.

Robert N. Davis
Professor of Law
Professor Davis was interviewed by WWRL 1600 (New York),
St. Petersburg Times, WTSP 10, Daytona Beach News Journal, Atlanta Journal Constitution, Bradenton Herald, KION 1460 (Salinas, Calif.), and Homeland Security Today on constitutional and international law issues, and frequently appeared on WTSP 10 during the election season.

Darby Dickerson
Vice President and Dean, Professor of Law

Dean Dickerson prepared her second printing, second edition, of the ALWD Citation Manual. Her article, “Too Busy to Vote?” was published in AAA Going Places Magazine, and “The Dean of Hurricanes: Lessons in Crisis Management” appeared in the NNSLO Journal (National Network of Law School Officers). She and Professor Robert Bickel co-authored “The Legacy Continues, the Struggle Continues,” which will be published in the Stetson Law Review. She presented “Difficult Conversations – Dealing with Staff” and moderated a panel on “Fostering Student Leadership” at the ABA Associate Deans Conference. She co-presented with Professors Lake and Vaughan “Danger Signs: Dealing Effectively with Troubled Students” at the Legal Writing Institute Biennial Conference. She attended The Florida Bar annual meeting, American Bar Association annual meeting, and Stetson-Oxford Comparative Higher Education Roundtable this summer. She was elected president of the Ferguson-White Inn of Court, vice chair of the ABA Law School Administration Committee, and secretary of the Pinellas County Education Facilities Authority, and was featured in the Tampa Bay Business Journal. She also traveled to Germany to explore new study abroad program options.

Jo Anne Durako
Director of Legal Research and Writing, Associate Professor of Law

Professor Durako’s article, “Occupational Segregation of Legal Writing Faculty: Separate But Unequal,” will be published by the University of Missouri–Kansas City Law Review, and “Better Writing, Better Thinking,” will be published in Legal Writing: Journal of the Legal Writing Institute. She presented her work on “Visual Clarity: How to Design the Document” at the ABA annual conference, “Visiting at Another Law School: Being a Good Guest” at the Legal Writing Institute biennial conference, and “Occupation Segregation” at the AALS annual conference. Professor Durako is a member of the Pennsylvania Bar Association Plain English Committee. She is the chair of the AALS Legal Writing, Reasoning & Research Section, and is a member of the ABA Communications Skills Committee’s subcommittee to revise the ABA Sourcebook on Legal Writing.

Peter L. Fitzgerald
Professor of Law

Professor Fitzgerald’s article, “Constitutional Crisis Over the Proposed Supreme Court for the United Kingdom,” will be published in an upcoming issue of the Temple International and Comparative Law Journal. He presented a workshop on “Suggestions to Help Issue Spotting and Essay Writing” at the University of Edinburgh School of Law. He was quoted in the Dow Jones Newswire and interviewed by BayNews 9 and WTSP 10 about economic and legal issues. He was named to the international advisory board of SanctionsWatch.com, a provider of Web-based information on national, regional and international sanctions policy, formulation and analysis. He contributed an editorial to the Newark Star Ledger, and his article on U.S. sanctions on Cuba was published in Sanctionswatch.com.

Roberta Kemp Flowers
Professor of Law and Director, Center for Excellence in Advocacy

Professor Flowers spoke with the ABA Journal, St. Petersburg Times and the Poynter Institute about legal ethics and criminal law issues.

Royal C. Gardner
Vice Dean and Professor of Law

Dean Gardner presented “The Role of Wetland Mitigation and Conservation Banking in Sustainable Development: The U.S. Experience” at the Oxford Roundtable on Trade, Growth and the Environment, and a course on “Federal Wetland Law and Policy” during the summer. He also presented a session on “The In-Lieu-Fee Mitigation Option” at the Meeting of the Society of Wetland Scientists, and served as a panelist on wetland issues for the Seventh National Mitigation and Conservation Banking Roundtable.

FACULTY NEWS

Four Stetson Law faculty have been recognized for their community leadership by major publications.

Dean Darby Dickerson and Associate Dean Jan Majewski were both named to the 2004 “Who’s Who in Tampa Bay Business” list by the Tampa Bay Business Journal. Dickerson was featured in the list of education leaders, and Majewski was included among law honorees.

Professors Rebecca Morgan and Nicholas Cox were named to Florida Trend magazine’s 2004 “Florida Legal Elite” list in the area of elder law. Morgan and Cox have worked with a number of groups, including AARP, Florida Attorney General’s Office, Florida Department of Law Enforcement and others to increase awareness of consumer fraud against senior citizens.
Conference. He serves as the vice chair for the U.S. National Ramsar Committee and vice-chair of the ABA Water Quality and Wetlands Committee.

Richard B. Graves III
LL.M. ’03
Instructor of Legal Research & Writing

Professor Graves received the Charles B. Seton award for his article, “Globalization, Treaty Powers, and the Limits of the Intellectual Property Clause” that appeared in the fall 2003 edition of the Journal of the Copyright Society of the U.S.A. He was interviewed by WTSP 10 about the 9/11 Commission report.

Cynthia G. Hawkins-León
Associate Professor of Law

Professor Hawkins-León published a review of Uneven Ground American Indian Sovereignty and Federal Law by David Wilkins and Tsianina Lomawaima in the Law and Politics Book Review. Her piece on “Pan-Africanism” will be published in the Encyclopedia of Black Studies. She participated in the “Interdisciplinary Law and Forensic Psychiatry/Psychology Program” at the University of South Florida Conflict Resolution Collaborative. Professor Hawkins-León serves on the executive boards of the Association of American Law Schools Minority Law Faculty Section and the Massachusetts Black Women Attorneys. She is a member of the Association of Family & Conciliation Courts and of the National Family Heritage Coalition.

Carol Henderson
Visiting Professor of Law and Director of National Clearinghouse for Science, Technology and the Law

Professor Henderson published an article on the clearinghouse in the American Society of Crime Laboratory Directors newsletter. She co-authored (with Brittan Mitchell ’03) a chapter, “Legal and Ethical Aspects of Bloodstain Pattern Evidence,” in Scientific and Legal Applications of Bloodstain Pattern Interpretation. She presented her work to the National Law Enforcement and Corrections Technology Center (Northeast); Granada, Spain Bar Association; Tampa Bay Chiefs of Police; and Miami-Dade Police Department Advanced Bloodstain Pattern Analysis Workshop. The Daytona Beach News-Journal published her article, “Tiniest of Details May Link Crime to Killer.” Her work has been featured in USA Today magazine, The Prosecutor and Seed Magazine.

Bruce Jacob ’59
Dean Emeritus and Professor of Law

Dean Jacob has been named to the National Committee on the Right to Counsel of the Constitution Project and attended its meeting. He will be the keynote speaker for the Wisconsin Legal Services annual banquet. He was interviewed by WUSF 89.7 about first amendment issues and the Associated Press about sentencing guidelines. He also co-chaired Stetson’s Gulfport Golden Anniversary planning committee.

C. Steven Yerrid
Peter F. Lake
Professor of Law and Co-Director, Center for Excellence in Higher Education Law and Policy

Professor Lake spoke at the Comparative Higher Education Roundtable in Oxford, England. He also co-presented “Danger Signs: Dealing Effectively with Troubled Students” at the Legal Writing Institute’s biennial conference, and spoke at the Florida Southern College Faculty Forum. Professor Lake presented “Creating a Facilitator University” at DePauw University. He is a frequent presenter in the areas of campus safety and violence prevention. He has been named to the Council of Advisors of the NETWORK consortium of colleges. He was also interviewed by Florida Trend about tort reform in Florida.

Jerome Latimer
Professor of Law

Professor Latimer served as a member of the Criminal Procedure Rules Committee. He contributed to law revisions regarding the bylaw voting requirements and the right to a speedy trial.

Thomas C. Marks Jr. ’63
Professor of Law

Professor Marks’ column, “Know Your Florida Constitution,” appeared in the Tampa Tribune, Sarasota Herald-Tribune and Panama City News Herald. This was the second column in a series.

Janice Kay McClendon
Associate Professor of Law

Professor McClendon’s article, “Bringing the Bulls to Bear: Regulating Executive Compensation to Realign Management and Shareholders’ Interests and Promote Corporate Long-Term Productivity,” will be published in an upcoming issue of the Wake Forest Law Review. Professor McClendon presented her research on “Regulating & Designing Executive Compensation to Promote Corporate Long-Term Productivity” at the Southeastern Association of Law Schools’ annual conference. She also attended the Attorneys for Family Held Enterprises 2004 annual conference.

Rebecca C. Morgan ’80
Boston Asset Management Faculty Chair in Elder Law and Director, Center for Excellence in Elder Law

Professor Morgan was interviewed by Tulsa World and WB 38 about elder abuse and elder custody issues; St. Petersburg Times about mental capacity legal issues; Morning Edition, WUSF 89.7 and WTVD 13 about Medicare drug discount cards; and Miami Herald and UPI News Service about legal issues surrounding Alzheimer’s Disease. She and Professor Nicholas Cox co-authored a column for The National Center on Elder Abuse about senior fraud.

Luz E. Nagle
Professor of Law

Professor Nagle represented the U.S. Department of Defense by making a two-hour presentation on international humanitarian law before a crowd of 300 Colombian military officers at the Colombian War College, and the U.S. embassy and Colombian Judge Advocate General school has invited her to return for additional training sessions. Her article, “Placing Blame Where Blame is Due: The Culpability of Illegal Armed Groups and Narcotraffickers in Colombia’s Environmental and Human Rights Catastrophes,” will be published in the William & Mary Environmental Law and Policy Review. She published “Colombian Asylum Seekers: What Practitioners Should Know About the Colombian Crisis” in the Georgetown Immigration Law Journal. Professor Nagle frequently serves as a moderator or panelist, including moderating a panel discussion on Women in Politics for the U.S. State Department’s Visiting International Program. She has been invited to brief the FBI counter-terrorism team on issues in Colombia, and presented “Recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions: Judicial Independence and Activism in the United States” to a delegation of Brazilian judges. Professor Nagle attended the 12th National Security Law Summer Institute. She has been interviewed by the media on international trafficking of humans, and is frequently invited to serve as a member of various organizations. Among others, she is a member of the board of directors of Women in International Trade, co-chair (committee six) of the International Bar Association, academic consultant to the Center for Terrorism Law, and an editor of the Journal of Iberoamerican Security. Correction to Stetson Lawyer spring 2004 issue: In July 2003, Professor Nagle was an invited guest to attend a historic inauguration ceremony in Bogotá for the Colombian armed forces’ new Judge Advocate School at the Universidad Militar de Nueva Granada, a program made possible in large measure by United States military efforts in the region.

Marleen O’Connor-Felman
Professor of Law

Professor O’Connor-Felman published “American Corporate Governance and Resilient Families: Investing in Children’s Human Capital In Turbulent Times” in the University of Southern California Law Review. The article was funded by a grant from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation and was presented at a conference in connection with the grant. Professor O’Connor-Felman presented “Women on Corporate Boards” at the Maryland Law School, and on director accountability at the AALS corporate law roundtable. She attended the Midwest Economics Association meeting, the Federal Sentencing Guidelines conference, and the African Corporate Governance conference, at which she served as a moderator. She serves as the co-director of the International Initiative for Corporate Governance and Accountability. She was interviewed by the Journal News about stock exchange criminal cases in New York.
Theresa J. Pulley Radwan
Associate Dean of Academics and Associate Professor of Law

Dean Radwan published “The Effect of Uniformity on State Sovereignty in Bankruptcy: The Supreme Court Hears State’s Claim of Sovereign Immunity in Dischargeability Proceeding” and “Supreme Court Favors Formula Approach for Determining Cramdown Interest Rate” in the Cramdown, the newsletter of the Tampa Bay Bankruptcy Bar Association. She organized a program on Women in Politics with the U.S. State Department’s Visiting International Program. She is a member of the Ferguson-White Inn of Court and the Tampa Bay Bankruptcy Bar Association. She attended the Associate Deans Conference of the American Bar Association in July 2004.

Wm. Reese Smith Jr.
Distinguished Professorial Lecturer

Professor Smith has been invited often to speak to groups, including presentations at the Barry University College of Law Inaugural Law Review Dinner, the St. Petersburg Bar Association Professionalism Seminar, the Retreat of Federal Judges, and various bar association and CLE programs. He attended, among others, meetings of The Florida Bar, American Bar Association, and the ALI-ABA Committee. Professor Smith serves as an adviser to Bay Area Legal Services.

Ruth Fleet Thurman ’63
Professor of Law

Professor Thurman attended the Gonzaga University Institute for Law School Teaching Conference, The Florida Bar annual meeting, and seminars of The Florida Bar on ethics, representation of children, and cross-examination skills. She serves as a mentor for the Community Law Program in marital and family law.

Stetson welcomes 11 new law faculty

Associate Professor Jo Anne Durako joins Stetson as Director of Legal Research and Writing. She publishes and presents frequently on legal research and writing issues and serves on the editorial boards of the Journal of Legal Education and the Legal Writing: Journal of the Legal Writing Institute. She completed her term as president of the Association of Legal Writing Directors in July and is chair-elect of the writing section for the American Association of Law Schools. She formerly served as legislative counsel for the U.S. Department of Education and worked in private practice. Professor Durako recently taught as a visiting professor at Georgetown University Law Center and previously directed the writing program at Rutgers School of Law-Camden. She started her teaching career at Villanova Law School and earned her J.D. from the University of Florida and her Ed.M. from Harvard University.

Associate Professor Cynthia G. Hawkins-León joined the Stetson law faculty in January 2004. She teaches family law, adoption law, alternative dispute resolution (family mediation), criminal law and property. She has written articles on a variety of topics, but her primary research focus has been adoption law and policy. She previously served on the faculties of New England School of Law, Syracuse University College of Law, and Duquesne University School of Law. Before entering academia, Professor Hawkins-León served as an administrative judge for the Contract Appeals Board in Washington, D.C. She earned her B.A. from Wellesley College and her J.D. from Harvard Law School.

Assistant Professor Mark Bauer focuses his scholarship and teaching on antitrust, administrative law and consumer protection. Before joining Stetson, Professor Bauer taught antitrust and legal writing at the Chicago-Kent College of Law. He authored a treatise on State Unfair Trade Practices Law and worked in the Federal Trade Commission’s Bureau of Competition, focusing on antitrust investigations. Professor Bauer clerked for Hon. William R. Robie, chief U.S. immigration judge. Also, Bauer practiced antitrust law with Bell, Boyd & Lloyd and Freeborn & Peters, both in Chicago. He received his B.A. from the University of Chicago and his J.D. from Emory University.

Assistant Professor Clark Furlow first joined the Stetson faculty as an adjunct professor in 2002 and was a visiting assistant professor in 2003. An expert in the field of takeovers, he advised the arbitrage department of a major investment firm regarding takeover battles fought in Delaware’s court system from 1985 through 1996, and co-authored a guide to Delaware takeover law. Professor Furlow was a partner with Smith, Katzenstein & Furlow in Wilmington, Del., where he litigated stockholder class and derivative actions. He earned his B.A. from Boston University and his J.D. from Emory University School of Law.

Visiting Assistant Professor Lee Coppock ’96 teaches evidence, trial advocacy and advanced civil trial skills. He is a partner with Paul & Coppock P.A. in Orlando and previously practiced insurance defense with Fisher, Rushmer, Werrenrath, Dickson, Talley & Dunlap P.A. He earned his B.A. from the University of South Florida and his J.D. from Stetson University College of Law. He was active on the moot court board and trial team as a student. He is covering courses for Professor Everhart, who will spend this year in China on a Fulbright grant.

Visiting Assistant Professor Joseph F. Morrissey teaches and writes in the areas of corporate law, securities and international private law. Prior to entering academia, he practiced corporate and securities law at Mayer, Brown & Platt in Chicago before running the firm’s office in Tashkent, Uzbekistan. While in Uzbekistan, he was a founding member and director of the local American Chamber of Commerce. He later co-managed Russian investments for Unifund Inc., based in Geneva and Moscow. He returned to Chicago and practiced corporate and securities law with Kirkland & Ellis. He received his A.B. from Princeton University and his J.D. from Columbia University School of Law. He previously taught as a visiting professor at the Chicago-Kent College of Law.

Instructor of Legal Research and Writing Catherine Cameron previously worked for the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press in Washington, D.C., and served as a staff attorney for the 18th Judicial Circuit in Sanford before joining the Stetson faculty. Professor Cameron earned her B.S., M.A. and J.D. degrees from the University of Florida.

Visiting Instructor of Legal Research and Writing Carol Cole McCrory ’02 served as an assistant state attorney for the 6th Judicial Circuit for Pinellas and Pasco counties, specializing in dependency litigation on behalf of abused, abandoned and neglected children. She received her M.A. from the University of South Florida and her J.D. from Stetson University College of Law. At Stetson, she was part of award-winning moot court teams, and her work was published in the Stetson Law Review.

In December, Assistant Professor Charles Rose will join the Stetson faculty to teach trial advocacy, evidence and professional responsibility. U.S. Army Major Rose currently serves as a deputy staff judge advocate in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at Fort Eustis, Va. He previously served on the faculty at the Judge Advocate General’s School and taught as an adjunct professor at Notre Dame Law School.
Florida Attorney General Charlie Crist spoke to the nearly 200 graduates at the Stetson University College of Law spring commencement on May 15, in the College of Law’s outdoor courtyard.

“The best lawyers understand that laws stand in the service of mankind, and not the inverse,” Crist told the crowd. “We are the beneficiaries of a movement that began with the Magna Carta; the then-peculiar notion that we should build societies around the rule of law rather than the rule of men.”

During the ceremony, 199 students received their degrees, including eight who received the LL.M. degree in International Law and Business; 36 J.D. students also earned their M.B.A. from the Stetson University School of Business Administration.

Mary Clapp was the top graduate in the May 2004 class; followed by Nicole Deese (whose brother Dustin was first in his December 2003 class) and David Evans.

Crist praised these high achievers, but offered words of hope to graduates of all ranks.

“For those of you with very respectful grades...I commend you for the balance and perspective you bring to your three-year odyssey. And for those of you who were really happy to get Cs, but had a really good time, I am here to tell you this: you, too, may one day be the Attorney General of the State of Florida.”

BY PROFESSOR MICHAEL P. ALLEN

WE HAVE ALL HAD THE experience of going to school or working with someone without whom a place just would not seem right. For me, such a person is Professor Becky Morgan ’80. Stetson would not be the same for me if I did not get to hear her shout “Hey guy!” when I see her on campus. I suspect that many other faculty members and staff, not to mention countless students, have similar thoughts about her.

Of course, one might be forgiven for assuming that Becky would be far more aloof, considering her title and impressive professional background. Not only is she a tenured full professor at the College of Law, but she also holds the Boston Asset Management Faculty Chair in Elder Law, the only one of its kind in the country. Over her academic career, she has, among other things, served as president of the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys, been the reporter for the Uniform Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act, been a delegate to the 1995 White House Conference on Aging, been a faculty member at the National Judicial College, and served as a special advisor to the American Bar Association’s Commission on Legal Problems of the Elderly.

Becky has also been heavily involved in activities closer to home. For example, she has served as the chair of the Elder Law Section and been a member of the Florida Attorney General’s Task Force on Elder Abuse. For her many accomplishments, Becky has been recognized as one of the outstanding lawyers in Florida and has received the Professionalism Award from the Florida Supreme Court. She has also received the Dean’s Award here at Stetson. And these accomplishments do not even address her work as an author of numerous books and articles on topics related to elder law, as well as her being a sought after speaker on the topic.

Impressive as Becky’s resume is, it is not the real purpose of this profile. Instead, my goal is to tell you something about her as a person. I asked Becky one day why she decided to attend law school (she graduated from Stetson in 1980 after having earned a degree in business from Central Missouri State University). She said without missing a beat that she went because she wanted “to make a difference and to help people.” What is so unique about that you may ask? After all, thousands of law students — past and present — would probably say the same thing. What is unique is that she really did it!

After graduation, Becky spent her years in practice making a difference working with low income elderly clients. This work was inspired by her experience in a law school clinic right here at Stetson. After several years in practice, she realized that she could actually make a greater impact if she did something to teach others how to work with and for the elderly, a population traditionally underserved by the legal profession. In 1986, that desire to teach led her back to Stetson and we are all the richer today.

Becky is a natural teacher. I spoke with a number of students who have taken her courses over the years, all of whom told me she is fantastic in the classroom. The comment that stayed with me most came from one student who said that taking Becky’s classes “makes you want to be a better person as well as a better lawyer.” I can tell you that there is probably no greater praise for a teacher than words like those. It is no wonder that when I asked Becky what she would want to do other than teach, she told me she couldn’t answer because “it’s impossible when you’re doing exactly what you want to do.” Becky was right that coming to teach has certainly made a greater impact than staying in practice. What she was wrong about is that this impact has by no means been limited to elder law. She has inspired students to be better across the board.

I asked Becky a variation of the “tombstone” question when preparing this profile. I told her to assume that she is retiring out west to the home she owns in Colorado. I continued, “What would you want people to say about you after you are relaxing in the West?” She thought for a good long time and then said two words: “I cared.” If that is what Becky wants her legacy to be, she can rest easy at night. All of those who have had the pleasure to know her can say right now that she cares, about the school, her colleagues, her students and her world. To paraphrase her former student, she makes us all want to be better people.

Thank you, Becky.
Dorothy Bishop’s official title was executive assistant to the dean, but for 48 years, she served as unofficial campus historian and many would say the behind-the-scenes glue that has held the College of Law together. At the end of September, Stetson Law lost one of its treasures as Bishop retired.

“The 48 years have gone very fast, it’s really hard to believe I’ve been here that long,” she said. “You have to like the place where you work, and everyone here is so friendly and that’s made the time here go faster, unfortunately.”

Bishop has seen many changes across campus. She knew Dean Emeritus Bruce Jacob when he was a student among the first classes at the Gulfport campus. From the building and later closing of the Dana Library, to the opening of the Tampa Law Center, Bishop has been at Stetson Law.

“She is a great employee, a wonderful person. She’s really just the best, they don’t come any better,” Dean Jacob said.

Connie Evans, director of faculty support, expressed similar thoughts. “She’s is such a true professional, and she has been that way since I got here in 1982. She is just a perfect lady.”

In 1956, after graduating high school, Dorothy Bishop set out to find a job. Her first ever interview, gained with the help of a local employment agency, was with the College of Law. Bishop was hired on the spot for $35 a week.

“Everything just kind of fell in my lap,” Bishop said.

Originally working in admissions and the registrar’s office, she had daily contact with students, getting to know each one. Bishop missed that contact with her switch to the Dean’s Office. She is thankful for the move, however, which she attributes in part to why the work stayed interesting for so long.

“It gives you an overview of everything going on campus-wide, and that made it interesting and fulfilling,” she said. “It makes it so much more exciting and worthwhile.”

It was tough to adjust to six deans, each with his or her particular style. “I’m a person who doesn’t like change,” she said with a laugh. “I’ve had the same eight years.

No matter the style, each dean ultimately wanted to advance the law school and further the student experience. “They all had their own goals for what they wanted to accomplish,” she said. “Each one has helped build the school up.”

She has many fond memories, such as the letters and memos Dean Jacob would dictate. “He’s just a real kind and thoughtful person who never left anything undone. But I think there are more papers from his era than all the other deans put together,” she said.

Another warm memory was interacting with Dean Harold Sebring’s associates and the others who helped build the College of Law to prominence in its early stages.

“Those people were special,” Bishop said. “It was just amazing how wonderful they were to want to help the school.”

It was not her intention to become a human database for all things Stetson, Bishop said, it’s just been her life. But her detailed memory has been very much appreciated. “It’s very rare these days for a person to spend her entire career at one place. Ms. Bishop has dedicated her professional life to Stetson, and she will always be remembered as a true Stetson treasure. We will miss her very much,” Dean Dickerson said.

“I appreciate the history more because I actually lived it,” Bishop said. “It’s just part of me. It’s what I have lived and where I have worked, all together.”

Since she announced her retirement, staff, students, faculty and even faculty spouses have made sure she’s firm in her decision to leave. “I certainly hate to see her go,” Dean Jacob said. “I keep saying she ought to reconsider.”

Despite the pleas, Bishop is looking forward to some free time. She doesn’t have specific plans, though some ideas include visiting her brother in Oregon and taking a trip with him to their childhood home of Utica, N.Y. She also wants to spend more time with “her girls,” her two dogs, Anna and Gretchen, and will tend to her garden. “My flowerbeds have suffered the last few years.”

Bishop said there was no specific spark for retiring, “It just seems the right time.”

She had been thinking about retirement for a few years. She brought the idea up to Dean W. Gary Vause before he fell ill, and after Dean Vause’s death in May 2003, Bishop stayed to help Dean Dickerson with the transition into her administration.

“I’m just thankful that I had an opportunity to work here. I really loved every minute of it. I’m thankful for the years they let me stay here.”

Dean
Looking at first-year law student Casey Reeder, one might not realize that she is one of the youngest students ever to attend Stetson University College of Law.

At 18 years old, Reeder began law school this fall as Stetson’s first “3-3” program student in recent history. This unique program allows high-achieving Stetson undergraduates to attend the law school after earning 90 credit hours (approximately three years) at the DeLand campus.

Reeder was already ahead of the curve. She had skipped her freshman year at Stetson thanks to the Advanced Placement credits she earned in high school. When pre-law adviser Dr. Wayne Bailey recommended she consider transferring to law school... early, the decision was easy. “When I realized there was potential for me to earn two degrees in five years, the opportunity seemed foolish to pass up,” Reeder said.

Once she completes 30 credit hours at the College of Law this spring, Stetson University will confer her bachelor’s degree in sociology. With high LSAT scores and a perfect undergraduate G.P.A., law school was not a tough transition for Reeder. “I completed my senior research last year, so I don’t feel unprepared academically,” she said. “I love it—it’s definitely a challenge, but I like a challenge.”

Her age has not presented an obstacle in her education. “I’m used to being younger than everyone in my class,” said Reeder, who also skipped the seventh grade. “I used to keep my age under wraps, but people don’t treat me differently since they found out. I just can’t go out drinking.”

Transferring to the College of Law also brought Reeder closer to her family in Pinellas Park and to the Ronald McDonald Houses in St. Petersburg, where she has volunteered for years. “It will be easy to take care of my pro bono requirement here — I’ll be done with the non-legal hours in a few months,” she said.

Stetson 3-3, 4-3 programs benefit both campuses

The highlight of Stetson University’s pre-law program is the opportunity for qualified students to skip their senior year of undergraduate study or gain automatic admission to the College of Law.

These “3-3” and “4-3” programs, named for the number of years spent at each campus, have attracted many high-achieving students to Stetson University. They express interest in Stetson not only for the chance to reduce their coursework, but also because of the relationship it represents between the two campuses.

“There is, in fact, a very special relationship,” described Dr. Wayne Bailey, professor of political science and pre-law adviser. “The law faculty trusts that our faculty prepares students well, as Stetson graduates invariably do well at the law school. We have more rigorous grading than other schools, and Stetson faculty are circumspect in deciding how they recommend candidates for law school.”

For the 3-3 program, students must be in the 85th percentile of their class and have a minimum LSAT score at the 75th percentile. To gain automatic admission in the 4-3 program, students must have a minimum G.P.A. of 3.1 and an LSAT score above the 60th percentile.

“It absolutely does help in recruiting, because students know the law school’s reputation,” said Deborah Thompson, vice president for enrollment management. According to Thompson, approximately 10 percent of entering Stetson undergraduates consider themselves pre-law.

When Dean Emeritus Lizabeth Moody first introduced the 3-3 program idea in 1996, she advocated that the law school would also benefit from the outstanding credentials of Stetson undergraduates. In describing Stetson’s first 3-3 program student, Bailey offered, “Casey could go to any law school in the country, but because of the 3-3 program, she chose Stetson.”

Due to the high standards and tightly organized course requirements, many students elect to pursue a minor, study abroad or attend the Washington Semester political science program instead of skipping their senior year. For those students, the 4-3 program may be a more practical option, said Dr. Grady Ballenger, dean of Stetson’s College of Arts and Sciences. “The undergraduate years are so important, so we don’t encourage students to rush through them. While for a very select few, 3-3 will be an excellent path, we are equally excited about the 4-3 program.”

Bailey concurs. “We never envisioned it to be a large program, but for those students who have the maturity and academic background, my advice and counsel is to go for it.”

- T. WAYNE BAILEY
Stetson Political Science Professor and Pre-Law Adviser
In fall 1942, Stetson University shut down the College of Law due to low enrollment resulting from World War II. The College reopened after the war and was flooded with students because of the G.I. Bill. There were too many students to accommodate on its DeLand campus. New facilities had to be found.

Retired Marine Corps Capt. Lemuel Haslup became dean in 1946, and the following year, upon his urging, the College of Law moved to buildings on a Navy air station outside DeLand. It was not a satisfactory arrangement. Following ABA demands and housing challenges in the DeLand area, Dean Haslup began to discuss moving the College of Law to another Florida location. In the midst of these discussions Dean Haslup died, and Charles J. Hilkey was selected dean. In 1953, with Hilkey’s backing, the University’s trustees secured passage of a state law authorizing the law school to relocate elsewhere within Florida.

Stetson’s President, Dr. J. Ollie Edmunds, a lawyer, began contacting alumni throughout the state about possibly moving the College of Law to their community. Offers soon came from Jacksonville, Orlando and Tampa. There was formidable opposition to the College leaving the University’s main campus from civic leaders in DeLand, prominent Volusia County Bar members, and some University officials and faculty. But the relocation search went forward.

The most attractive initial offer came from the city of Jacksonville. It proposed to lease the University a renovated city building for $1 per year and offered rich donations and revenue opportunities. Influential Florida judges and lawyers backed Jacksonville’s proposal. Despite the strong offer, the University rejected it.

The city of Tampa offered to lease a tract of land on Davis Island, adjacent to downtown, on a long-term basis to the University. The Board of Commissioners of Hillsborough County offered $75,000 to the University to construct a law building on the property.

But the winner of the relocation sweepstakes for the College of Law turned out to be none of the above, a Florida town not officially in the running — Gulfport.
Prominent St. Petersburg-area citizens, including Florida Power President Bill Clapp, came together and offered to raise $100,000 in cash from private sources and pledges. This $100,000 would be applied toward the $200,000 price for the expansive grounds and buildings of a former grand hotel and recent home of the Florida Military Academy.

The property was in foreclosure and owned by Union Trust Company. The university obtained an appraisal that valued the property at more than $1 million. With such compelling information, Stetson University’s Board of Trustees unanimously accepted the St. Petersburg group’s offer. Stetson paid $35,000 down and financed the remainder, using other donated funds for renovations. Besides other business donations of nearly $100,000, a $50,000 grant came from the Avalon Corporation and a $17,000 gift from the Charles Merrill Foundation.

The University purchased 17 buildings on approximately 21 acres, composing a gorgeous, architecturally distinct campus. The buildings had been part of the Hotel Rolyat built in 1925 by promoter Jack Taylor. “Rolyat” is Taylor spelled backwards. The hotel was styled after a medieval Spanish village, replete with appropriate towers, arches, arcades and walled enclosures. In addition, there were green, landscaped open spaces, highlighted by imported, brightly colored, antique-tiled fountains. The main entrance to the Plaza is a reproduction of the Alcantara Bridge in Toledo, Spain, and the main tower is based on Torre del Oro in Seville, Spain.

Not only did the relocation to Gulfport result in a unique and colorful campus for the College of Law, it also invigorated all connected with the school. Stetson President Dr. J. Ollie Edmunds appointed Florida Supreme Court Justice Harold L. “Tom” Sebring as dean soon after the move. Sebring had a diverse professional background, having spent time as a farmer, military officer, athlete, head football coach at the University of Florida, circuit judge and Supreme Court justice. Justice Sebring also served as a presiding judge at the Nuremberg Nazi war tribunals.

As dean of the College for 13 years (1955-1968), Sebring oversaw major expansion: the student body grew from 95 to 295, the faculty expanded from three members to 12, and 40,000 volumes were added to the library. Sebring established a Board of Overseers to help run the College, and he also established a public defender clinic. With Sebring’s guidance, the College of Law was on the path to legal excellence.

Since 1968, the College of Law has continued to grow and flourish. Following Dean Sebring, the law school was led by deans Richard T. Dillon, Bruce R. Jacob, Lizabeth A.
Scenes from the Gulfport 50th anniversary weekend

Alumni from the 1950s and early 1960s came back for a weekend of reunion, history and celebration. The weekend kicked off with a cocktail reception and history lecture presented by Professor Michael Swygert. Alumni and legacy students attended a legacy breakfast on Saturday morning, followed by a fun afternoon that included a car show (pictured right), trolley rides through Gulfport, and guided tours of the campus. The highlight was the celebration banquet, when Murray Sams ’49 led alumni as they shared stories and anecdotes from their years at Stetson.

Above, visitors at the anniversary celebration took free trolley tours through the campus and Gulfport.

2. Professor Ruth Fleet Thurman ’63 shares her story with the banquet crowd.
3. Seymour A. Gordon ’60 and Allen Samuels ’56 at the cocktail reception.
4. Fred Karl ’49 and Murray Sams ’49 laugh over stories with the audience.
5. Jack Inman ’49 shares his favorite anecdote from his years at Stetson.

Moody, W. Gary Vause, and now Darby Dickerson. Stetson Law graduates have included six Florida Supreme Court justices, several federal district and appellate court jurists, scores of state judges, numerous public officials, renowned trial lawyers and corporate executives.

Today, Stetson University College of Law has approximately 950 full- and part-time students; 51 full-time faculty (including three chaired professors); approximately 100 part-time faculty; and 180 staff. The library has grown to house more than 390,000 volumes. The College offers programs leading to the J.D., M.B.A. and LL.M. degrees. The part-time program and the Tampa Law Center offer new opportunities. The Tampa Law Center is a major hub for legal activity in downtown Tampa and houses evening law classes, the Tampa branch of the Florida Second District Court of Appeal, and continuing legal education programs. This unique combination makes the William Reece Smith Jr. Courtroom only the third location in the country — and the first in Florida — where a law school and sitting court share space.

The College of Law’s curriculum includes international programs; one of the nation’s top-ranked trial advocacy programs (placing first in six of the nine annual rankings by U.S. News & World Report); and recognized programs in elder law and international law and business. The College is also a leader in the field of higher education law and policy.

But more important than all of the above are the College’s students. Today, the diverse student body has more women than men, a growing number of international students, and a strong percentage of minority students from all regions of the United States. In its more than 100-year history, and particularly in its 50 years in Tampa Bay, Stetson University College of Law has reached upward and provides a top legal education.
STETSON UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Hall of Fame

Edith M. Atkinson ’22
Judge Edith M. Atkinson was Stetson’s first woman judge and a pioneer in the juvenile justice system. She traveled throughout the country visiting juvenile courts to learn about the juvenile court system. She tirelessly spoke before civic and church organizations to inform the public about the needs of the juvenile court. Judge Atkinson encouraged the Dade County Bar Association to offer free legal services for the poor, and founded the Girl Scout Council for Dade County. Upon her death in 1983, Judge Atkinson left $100,000 to Stetson law scholarships.

Charles A. and Eleanor N. Dana
The Danas were strong financial contributors to the College of Law after its move to Gulfport. Gifts from Mr. and Mrs. Dana and the Dana Foundation have exceeded $2 million. Mr. Dana first became interested in Stetson in 1950 through Walter Mann, a university trustee. Mrs. Dana, a substantial contributor to the College of Law in her own right, was a familiar sight on campus. Stetson honored her with an L.L.D. degree in 1968. In 1975, she received a “Champion of Higher Education in Florida” award from the association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Richard T. Dillon ’57
Soon after graduating in 1957, Richard Dillon was named librarian and an assistant professor of law at Stetson. In 1959, he was named the first assistant dean of the law school and held this post continuously until his appointment to dean in September 1968. He served as Stetson’s law dean for 13 years. His administration was characterized by extensive physical improvements to the campus and tremendous academic growth.

J. Ollie Edmunds ’28
Dr. Edmunds was the first university-trained lawyer and Stetson law school graduate to assume the presidency of Stetson University. He was associated with Stetson University for 60 years, from 1921 — when he enrolled as an undergraduate student — until his retirement as chancellor. He was president when the law school moved from DeLand to Gulfport.

Bruce Jacob ’59
Twenty-two years after graduating from Stetson University College of Law, Bruce Jacob returned to his alma mater to serve as dean for 13 years. In his years as dean, Jacob guided the College of Law to significant changes in legal education. Dean Jacob established the Elsie and Ed Jacob Scholarship Fund in memory of his parents. Dean Jacob, who also served as dean at Mercer, continues to teach at Stetson.

Frederick B. Karl ’49
Fred Karl has made countless contributions to Florida residents throughout his long career. He has led several of Florida’s major public institutions, serving as a Florida Supreme Court justice, state representative, state senator, state public counsel, county administrator, county attorney, city attorney, gubernatorial candidate and hospital CEO.

Elizabeth A. Kovachevich ’61
Judge Elizabeth Kovachevich was the only woman in her graduating class at Stetson University College of Law. She was the first woman circuit court judge in Pinellas County. President Reagan nominated her to the federal bench, and from 1996 to 2003, she served as Chief Judge of the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida. Judge Kovachevich has served on the College of Law’s Board of Overseers, and she also started the federal judicial internship program for Stetson students.

Calvin Arnold Kuenzel
Calvin Arnold Kuenzel was a celebrated Stetson law professor who taught almost four decades until his death in 1998. Leg-
Stetson University College of Law honored the dedication and contributions of 17 alumni, faculty and friends into its Hall of Fame, recently established by Dean Darby Dickerson. The charter members, selected by a 10-member panel, were inducted on Sept. 19.

To have been selected, candidates must have reached and remained at the pinnacle of their field for a period of time sufficient to demonstrate perseverance and maturation, or must have affected a profound positive influence on the College of Law.

James Nemec '36 and Ruth Bartlett Nemec
The James and Ruth Nemec Auditorium at the College of Law and Nemec Hall on Stetson's DeLand campus are both named in recognition of their generosity. They established the James and Ruth B. Nemec Scholarship Fund at Stetson and co-founded the Palm Beach Friends of Stetson University.

Perry Nichols '37
Perry Nichols was one of the nation’s most successful trial lawyers and president of both the American Trial Lawyers Association and the International Trial Lawyers Association. A charter member of the Law Center Foundation and the Stetson Law Board of Overseers, he served as chairman of each. Nichols gave generously of his time, talent and finances at some of the most crucial moments in the College of Law’s history.

Harold L. “Tom” Sebring
Harold L. “Tom” Sebring served as dean of the College of Law from 1955 to 1968. Dean Sebring served as the head football coach for the University of Florida before giving up football for a legal career. He served as a circuit judge and Florida Supreme Court justice and chief justice. After World War II, he was a judge for the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal.

William Reece Smith Jr.
Professor William Reece Smith’s relationship with the law school dates back to 1954, when he was an adjunct professor. He has served as distinguished professorial lecturer at Stetson.

Lewis H. Tribble ’15
Dean Lewis Tribble was a member of the faculty of Stetson University Law School for 17 years, serving 10 of those as dean. He fought for the law school’s accreditation and kept the school financially afloat during the Depression years.

William Amory Underhill ’36
William Amory Underhill was a Stetson University trustee from 1977 to 1986 and served as a member of the College of Law Board of Overseers for more than 20 years, serving as chair for 18 of those 20 years. Stetson recognized his many years of service by naming him trustee emeritus in 1994. He was the 1988 recipient of one of Stetson’s highest honors, the Doyle E. Carlton Award for outstanding service to the university and to higher education.

W. Gary Vause
Dean W. Gary Vause served Stetson University College of Law for 28 years as law professor, assistant dean and four years as dean until his death in May 2003. He spearheaded construction of Stetson’s new Tampa Law Center. Dean Vause established or contributed greatly to a number of other Stetson programs, including its LL.M. program in International Law and Business; the dual J.D./M.B.A. degree program and summer abroad programs in Granada, Spain, and Tallinn, Estonia. He also expanded Stetson’s curriculum in health and elder law.

She came to this country fleeing persecution after being targeted by religious extremists in her native Pakistan.

Lawyer Neelofer Syed made legal history — and enemies — when she won a landmark case in Pakistan that established the right for women to marry without their parents’ permission.

“People who discriminate against women,” she declares, “are so yesterday.”

Determined to return to Pakistan to work for peace and human rights despite attempts on her life, the 29-year-old advanced studies student at Stetson University College of Law is optimistic about the future of her country and her role in shaping it.

“There is no doubt that in the Islamic world there is now a conflict between — I don’t like to call them fundamentalists and progressives or fundamentalists and secularists — but there is a conflict on how Islam should adapt itself to the modern age,” said Jamsheed Marker, a former Pakistan ambassador to the United States who teaches international relations at Eckerd College. “And I think [Syed] is a product of that turmoil.”

The role of women in Pakistan is part of that struggle.

“Pakistan has had women prime ministers, women ambassadors, governors, judges,” Marker said. “It’s not as if women are totally repressed by any means. At the same time, there’s a certain feudal element that is extremely reactionary. [Syed] has taken up the cause of women who have suffered because of this feudal element.”

One of Few Female Lawyers

Syed was a lawyer in Punjab province when she won the landmark women’s rights case in 1999. For her work, she was recognized this year by a human rights organization, Women on the Way, as a “woman of achievement.”

“Pakistan has had women prime ministers, women ambassadors, governors, judges,” Marker said. “It’s not as if women are totally repressed by any means. At the same time, there’s a certain feudal element that is extremely reactionary. [Syed] has taken up the cause of women who have suffered because of this feudal element.”

“In 1996, after practicing business, corporate and family law, Syed was named human rights coordinator of Punjab. She also served as director in the Rugmark Society of Pakistan, a nonprofit organization that works to end child labor in the rug industry.

Syed, who became a lawyer at 19, said she was drawn into family law because women prefer to have female lawyers, and she said only about 15 percent of the lawyers in Pakistan are women.

A Muslim, Syed is distressed by the actions of some radicals in the name of religion. “You have no idea how liberal Islam is when it comes to women,” she said. “All the discrimination is cultural.

“This is something very frustrating to me because, for the failure of followers, a whole religion gets persecuted.”

Syed belongs to the Ahmadi sect of Islam, which she called “true Islam.”

A socially progressive, nonviolent denomination of Islam, Ahmadi has about 200 million adherents in 150 to 200 countries, said Gordon Newby, chairman of the department of Middle and South Asian Studies at Emory University. Started toward the end of the 19th century as a reformist movement, Ahmadi is derided by other denominations as not being true Islam.

“We do not believe in suicide bombing,” Syed said. “Suicide is a sin, which God said he would never forgive.”

Landmark Case

The marriage case began in 1997, when a man who went to the same school as Syed asked her whether the fact that he married his wife without her parents’ approval was legal. The man, Arshad Mahmood, was middle class, and his wife, Saima Waheed, was from an influential, moneyed, fundamentalist family.

Syed said she told Mahmood he had no legal problems.

Two weeks later, Mahmood told Syed that he had been kidnaped by his in-laws and tortured. He was presented with divorce papers and a deadline of the next day to file them. His wife was being held by her family against her will.

Syed enlisted the support of her uncle’s friend, the solicitor general of Punjab, to free the woman. She also turned to a widely known human rights advocate, Asma Jehangir, and arranged for Waheed to stay in a guarded shelter.

Waheed’s family filed numerous criminal charges against their son-in-law, Syed said, including accusing him of abducting his wife, forging their marriage certificate and stealing her jewelry.

“Everything boiled down to one question,” Syed said. “Is it against Islam for a girl to get married without the permission of her parents?”

Mahmood was jailed for a year, but in 1999, the courts ruled that women marrying without permission “is very much Islam,” Syed said. The case is pending before Pakistan’s Supreme Court, and the couple have won political asylum in Norway.

“Theyir lives were in danger,” Syed said, “because you never know with these lunatics.”

The case, Syed wrote in a statement, “opened doors to many other couples who were in the same situation, but too afraid to come forward. The verdict gave them hope to fight and win their battles legally.”

Asylum in U.S.

Traveling for about a year after winning the case, Syed attended conferences in the United States and the United Kingdom. When she returned to Pakistan in 2000, she was harassed and derided as a Westerner trying to introduce Western morals into the country.

She didn’t take it seriously at first, but the tires on her car were slashed, and then the brake fluid was drained. Another time, the windshield was shattered by a bullet. She thought it was a stray not intended for her, but when her apartment was stoned late one night, she decided it was time to leave. Her mother, Rafia Bokhari, who had heart problems, lived with her. “Within a week of that, we moved out,” Syed said.

After she and her mother came to the United States in late 2000, she said, friends in Pakistan wrote to her saying supporters of Waheed’s family were claiming responsibility for the things that had happened to her. Syed was granted asylum in 2001.

She lived in Washington, D.C., New York and Orlando, before becoming an advanced studies student on a scholarship at Stetson. She credits her passion about human rights to her parents, who separated when she was in the third grade. Her father, retired and living in the United Kingdom, owned a pharmaceuticals business. Her mother was a homemaker and raised her alone without financial help from her father after the separation.

Her parents, Syed said, stood against the rest of their family to ensure she and her sister were educated.

Her mother, who never attended school but owns hundreds of books, is her primary role model. “I cannot live without her,” Syed said. “She’s like my axis on which I revolve.”

Syed is helping Stetson expand its international law component to include public and corporate law. “It’s very healthy for our students to interact and hear such a different world perspective,” said John F. Cooper, associate dean of international and cooperative programs at Stetson. Cooper said Syed is “delightful to work with. She works very hard. She’s a breath of fresh air around here.”

Syed’s hoped-for return to Pakistan is complicated by her immigration status. Once someone with political asylum goes home, it is very difficult to come back to the United States, she said. She hopes her petition for permanent residency will be expedited, so that she may travel.

She doesn’t fear returning to Pakistan.

“I’m never afraid,” she said. “I get saddened, but to say that I’m scared would be wrong. ... I know if I’m being tested, it’s because I’m being chosen for better things.”
THE CORNERSTONE CAMPAIGN
LAYING THE FOUNDATION FOR TOMORROW

Individual giving critical to College of Law success

The Cornerstone Campaign is the biggest development effort in the College of Law’s history. Our goal is to raise $12 million by May 31, 2005, and we are aiming for success.

This past summer, we began the last phase of the campaign. Beginning in fall 2004 and continuing until the end of the campaign in May 2005, alumni will be contacted by phone and through the mail. I hope you will respond favorably when you are contacted.

Like many other private law schools, individualized giving must be the cornerstone of Stetson University. Financial gifts from our alumni and friends help reduce the law school’s dependence on tuition income while trying to keep education affordable for those who seek a law degree.

Our ability to focus on a quality education for students is made possible, in large part, by the generosity of our alumni, friends, faculty and staff. Continued support enables the College to provide for the current and future educational needs of our students.

My deepest thanks to those who have already made a commitment. Our campaign priorities reflect real needs for program initiatives that affect our students, faculty and staff. You are helping us meet an ambitious fundraising goal for the law school.

The real cost for fully funding the priorities of the law school are tremendous; however, the Cornerstone Campaign has lifted us to a new level of giving amongst our alumni and friends. With your help, we can accomplish great things here at Stetson. You allow us to dream big dreams. You are the reason we continue to excel in all that we do. We hope that together we will elevate this law school to a new level of excellence.

This is a unique opportunity for the law school to take the lead in legal education. We ask that each of you reach deep in your pockets when you are contacted during this last year of the campaign. Every dollar will be a great investment in the legal profession, and as the reputation of the college advances, so does the value of your degree.

Sincerely,

Dotti E. Bressi, Ed.D.
Associate Vice President for College Relations
Part-time student awarded largest Stetson scholarship ever

BY AARON REINCHELD

STETSON PART-TIME STUDENT Darin Richter no longer has to worry about tuition, the cost of books or how he will support his family after receiving the first Emmitt Wilkes Scholarship, the largest award given to an individual student in the school’s history. Established with a gift from James L. Wilkes II, for the next four years the award will cover all tuition, fees and books, and will provide an additional $38,000 annually for living expenses.

The scholarship was established through a $175,000 contribution to Stetson from Wilkes, co-founder of the Tampa-based firm of Wilkes & McHugh and a 1983 graduate of the Stetson Law. Through Stetson’s matching scholarship gift program, the total Wilkes scholarship fund became $262,500.

The scholarship is given to a student in the part-time J.D. program. Preference is given to non-traditional students who are entering law school as a possible career change or those who are raising a family. It is designed to support the student throughout the four years of the program.

“I wanted to help a deserving student with life experience have the financial wherewithal to pursue a legal career,” Wilkes said.

Richter is a program manager for CAE, a flight simulator company in Tampa. He has a bachelor’s degree in mechanical engineering from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, concentrating in aerospace design. He is a former U.S. Army Captain and Blackhawk helicopter pilot. At CAE, Richter works primarily with the U.S. Air Force and Lockheed Martin in CAE’s C-130 line of products.

“This is obviously a very, very generous gift,” Richter said. “It is indicative of Mr. Wilkes and his firm’s focus; they take care of families. That is exactly what was done in this case.”

Richter and his wife of 10 years, Emma, have four children: Veronica, age 9; Geoffrey, age 7; Isabelle, age 5; and Bernadette, age 2. They acknowledged that going to school part-time while working full-time and raising a family would be a challenge, and recognized the financial relief as a true easing of burden.

“I knew law school would be difficult, and that time constraints would necessitate a sacrifice of family time, grades or both,” Richter said. “Mr. Wilkes’ benevolence makes it possible for me to maintain focus on these two most important aspects of my life without compromise.”

Besides the annual stipend, there are additional funds set aside to help pay for the necessary bar review courses and living expenses while studying for the bar exam before graduation.

“I will not take this scholarship for granted,” Richter said. “I sincerely hope to be in a position at some point in the future to repay this scholarship in like form, thus propagating Mr. Wilkes’ generosity to future generations of law students.”
We would like to thank the following alumni, faculty, staff, friends, firms, companies, corporations and foundations for their assistance and continued support of Stetson University College of Law during the 2003-2004 academic year, running from June 1 through May 31.

Your gifts make the critical difference in the life of the College of Law and our students. Your financial contributions help us to maintain this law school’s well-deserved reputation for superior teaching, able scholarship and distinguished service to the profession. Thank you for helping us succeed.

If we have overlooked anyone, please forgive us and allow us a chance to correct our records by contacting the Office of College Relations at (727) 562-7818 or alumni@law.stetson.edu.

Alumna receives Selig I. Golden award

Sixth Judicial Circuit
Judge Susan F. Schaeffer ’71 was selected as the 2004 recipient of the Selig I. Golden Memorial Award, which recognizes a member of Florida’s legal community who has made substantial contributions to the criminal justice system.

Judge Schaeffer, also a former Stetson assistant professor, was presented the award at a June luncheon in her honor during the Justice Summit, a Florida Bar Criminal Law Section meeting in Boca Raton.

Nominations come from judges, officials of the state’s executive branch, law school deans, former recipients, and other members of the Criminal Law Section. The State Bar’s Executive Council selects the recipient.

In a letter notifying her of the award, Melanie Hines, chair of the Criminal Law Section, said Judge Schaeffer’s “nationally recognized work on capital case litigation and training, coupled with your Herculean efforts as chair of the Trial Court Budget Commission, are but two of the reasons you were chosen for this recognition. Your life-long commitment to the cause of justice has been an inspiration.”

The commission is a statewide committee that has been the court system’s link to the legislature as various trial courts shifted funding from individual counties to the state budget.

After serving 22 years on the bench, Judge Schaeffer plans to retire at the end of 2004. She has received many awards throughout her distinguished career, the first of which came in 1971, when she graduated first in her class at Stetson and was presented with The Florida Bar Award as Outstanding Graduate of Stetson. In 1996, Stetson presented her with the Ben C. Willard Award for her “professional achievement and dedication to excellence and betterment of society exemplifies the ideas” of the College of Law.

Alumna appointed chief technology officer of Florida

Simone Marstiller ’96 was appointed Florida’s chief information officer at the State Technology Office in May. Prior to her appointment to state CIO, Marstiller served as deputy chief of staff to Governor Jeb Bush and worked as general counsel for the Department of Management Services, including a stint as interim secretary of the department. Previously, she coordinated major litigation and other legal matters involving the departments of Children and Families, Management Services and Elder Affairs as assistant general counsel to Bush.

Marstiller was chief appellate counsel for the Agency for Health Care Administration before working with Governor Bush. She began her career as judicial clerk to Hon. Emerson R. Thompson Jr. in the 5th District Court of Appeal in Daytona Beach.
Teachers by day... students by night

by Aaron Reinechel

By day, Jackie Brown collects homework and chemistry tests from classrooms full of students at Chamberlain High in Tampa. By night, she not only has to grade papers, but she has to read and homework of her own as a student in the College of Law’s part-time program.

She is one of a handful of students in the part-time program who are also teachers.

“I really enjoyed working with students and I also really liked the subject matter, chemistry, so it’s great to be able to interact with the kids,” Brown said. “You really do feel like you’re making a difference every day, that you’re impacting their lives.”

It is Brown’s first semester at Stetson, and so far, things are going well. The three years teaching chemistry have created a more disciplined law student.

“Having been on the other side and having taught, I realize a lot of things that I might have done as a student would have bothered me,” she said.

For the last three years, Shahtia Gay has taught 5th grade at Campbell Park Elementary Marine Science Center in Pinellas County and studied in the part-time program. She had similar feelings. “I think I am a better student because I know how I want my students to listen and study,” she said.

The flip side can also hold true. Brown said her law classes have also benefited her as a teacher through incorporating the approaches and methods of her professors.

“I see things now that my professors do and think, ‘That’s a great way to present that material,’” she said.

Third-year part-time student Nancy Besore has taught for 19 years. She is in her sixth year teaching American government and history at Riverview High School in southeast Hillsborough County. She said that being a student has an impact on her teaching, particularly because of the subjects she teaches.

“The law work has greatly enhanced what I’m doing in the classroom,” she said.

Besore was a part of the Stetson group that studied in Argentina over the summer. She said that experience has affected her teaching the most. “I learned so much about comparative law, I’ve been telling stories about Argentina all term,” she said. “That experience has tied in so beautifully with the American government class, because our governmental concepts are so different than the civil law Argentina has.”

Attending classes can also provide a type of mental exercise. “It’s nice to be thinking all the time again,” Gay said. “After you’ve taught your subject for a while, you can get complacent.”

All said that a teacher’s hours and schedule are conducive to their Stetson duties.

As with anyone working full-time and taking on law school, though, it is tough to balance responsibilities. That results in days when neither may be getting 100 percent effort, Gay said.

“I don’t want to settle for being a mediocre teacher or student, so I push myself far, which is sometimes stressful,” she said.

There is a large amount of stress being a teacher, which is part of why Gay was pushed to become a law student to eventually help teachers.

“Teaching is my passion; however, it is the only job where everyone tells you how to do your job — the parent who didn’t finish high school, the president, etc.” she said. “Initially, I wanted to teach to touch lives. Now I want to make changes in education.”

Being in the middle of her law school education, Gay said in addition to the pressure of teaching and learning, she has also struggled to find the time to do clinics or internships in her already packed schedule.

“It is hard to gain legal experience,” she said. “I don’t feel as if firms equate being a teacher with having valuable experience.”

Besore has found the time to be a chief ambassador and be involved with other Stetson extracurriculars.

“It’s a lot of work, but it’s doable. I find it very satisfying,” she said. “Just love telling other people about how it is possible to do this.”

In addition to her study abroad experience, Besore was able to complete an internship during the summer break from teaching two years ago.

“It takes a little extra initiative to get exposed to extra opportunities,” she said.

Despite any obstacles to the traditional law school experience, Gay sees her time as a teacher very valuable in the foundation for her legal career and her future efforts lobbying for education issues.

“I am more cognizant of the laws that have an impact on education on one end and more aware of the issues from a practice standpoint by being a teacher,” she said.

This is one of many advantages of being a part-time student who has a career. Besore pointed out another when pondering her future.

“I don’t have to get a job in the law,” Besore said. “I’m just excited to be learning it.”

Stetson presents awards for work of alumni, friends

In July, the College of Law honored the commitment and dedication of three extended family members with newly established Distinguished Service Awards. The inaugural recipients were:

- Leo J. Govoni, president of Boston Asset Management, a member of the College of Law Board of Overseers and an advocate for America’s elderly
- Chris W. Altenbernd, chief judge of Florida’s Second District Court of Appeal
- William Reece Smith Jr., of counsel and chair emeritus of Carlton Fields P.A. and a distinguished professorial lecturer at Stetson

“This award seeks to show our appreciation to those who did not graduate from Stetson, but who have helped shape our institution,” said Dean Darby Dickerson. The award will be presented annually to non-alumni who have made significant, meritorious and continuing contributions to the College of Law.

Several awards honoring Stetson alumni were also presented this year:

Edwin T. “Eddie” Mulock ’68 received the Ben C. Willard Award for his distinguished humanitarian achievements for Florida citizens. Mulock has practiced law in Bradenton for more than 30 years.

Hon. Kenneth A. Marra ’77 received the Distinguished Alumnus Award for service to humanity and proven dedication that have fostered the ideals of the College of Law. Judge Marra took office as a U.S. District Judge for the Southern District of Florida in September 2002.

Gary R. Trombley ’73 received the Paul M. May Meritorious Service Award in recognition of his continued support of the College of Law through contributions of time and gifts. Trombley is a member of the Board of Overseers and a member of the law firm of Trombley & Hanes in Tampa.

Commemorative Bricks

Leave your mark for generations

THE CORNERSTONE CAMPAIGN
Laying the Foundation for Tomorrow
Make your mark on Stetson’s Tampa Law Center by ordering your personalized brick on one of the beautiful entry plazas. Leave a message that generations can view, read and appreciate.

The decorative bricks, which line the grand walkways, provide an excellent opportunity to honor a graduate, memorialize a loved one, perpetuate a personal name, pay tribute to someone who has made a difference in your life or publicize a law firm listing.

Purchasing a brick will help lay the foundation for excellence as we pave an educational pathway to the future. Located in Tampa’s downtown business district, the Tampa Law Center houses Stetson’s part-time program, CLE programs and Florida’s Second District Court of Appeal.

Order your personalized brick today.

Whoever said judges don’t have a sense of humor has never met Judge Steve Rushing ’75. A retired Pinellas County judge, Rushing has poked fun at lawyers and judges for decades through the art of drawing. He has authored three collections of legal cartoons, and his work has been published in more than 30 different legal journals. Now, his hobby has led him to become an editorial cartoonist for Hernando Today.

“I saw it as a chance to get involved in the community, and there is some satisfaction in poking fun at elected officials,” said Rushing. Approximately 150 of his cartoons were published in the newspaper last year, and he is considering publishing another collection of legal cartoons within the next few years.

“I’ve always just enjoyed doing it,” he said. “Some people tell jokes, some write poems, and I keep my sanity drawing ‘Legal Insanity’ cartoons.”

Cartooning has been Rushing’s release since his days as a St. Petersburg High School student. His first “legal” cartoon was published in law school and although he has had over 400 legal cartoons published, Rushing maintains, “I never drew a cartoon when I was on the bench in the courtroom, but I did get a lot of inspiration.”

Rushing considers himself retired, despite all evidence to the contrary. In addition to drawing for Hernando Today, he continues to work as a private mediator for Tampa Bay Mediation Center and as a litigation attorney for Southwest Florida Water Management District.
