

Stetson Law Review Writing Credits

In addition to the credit hours that members of the Stetson Law Review earn for participating in the publication process, in the semester in which the Law Review faculty advisor determines that the member has earned writing credit, the student will receive one or two additional credits, graded on the S/U basis. The faculty advisor has discretion to determine whether the student has earned one or two credits, and in that process will consider the difficulty and originality of the topic, the quality of research and writing, and the length of the paper, among other things. Students should be mindful that Law Review writing credits do count toward the maximum number of credits a student may earn in a given semester. If the credit is deemed earned during a summer session in which the student is not otherwise taking a full load, tuition will not be charged for these credits.

Adopted by faculty May 16, 2001; revised January 21, 2009.